Desc. : This painting attempts to represent life and its grains. Grain of malice or beauty, grain of madness or a small speck? those moments of life that are special and where at the bend of a curve or a line the light ends up passing through and illuminating particular moments. Darker colors rub shoulders with lightnings of life. The grains are ephemeral they transform throughout life. I love your mother, she is necessary to my life, and she has never given me a grain of misfortune.?(Stendhal, Lucien Leuwen, 1834)

Desc. : La dolce vita is not only the gentle idleness that in Italy is a true art of living. It is also a painting in homage to the Sienese school of painting which in Italy extended from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century and developed in parallel with the pictorial art of the Florentine school. It is distinguished by a refined taste for color, inherited from Byzantium, and a very particular chromatism: oranges, very bright reds. This painting therefore tries to be the embodiment of a life full of carelessness, love and red of Siena.

Desc. : From the pale pink to the red of Andrinople, from sand to ochre, here is an atmosphere that reminds us of the colors with which the German painter Lovis Corinth painted, but in a more expressionist way, the skin of his nudes. Andrinople is the ancient name of the city now called Edirne, in Turkey, where the manufacture of this pigment was a jealously guarded secret. Here is a red canvas, atmospheric and secret.
